Iran imposes sanctions on EU, British individuals, entities

Iran has imposed retaliatory sanctions against a number of European Union (EU) and British individuals and entities.

The Iranian Foreign Ministry announced the counter-measures in a statement on Tuesday.

The ministry had warned on Monday that it would retaliate against similar moves taken earlier by the Council of the European Union and the UK against scores of Iranian individuals and entities over what they call the Islamic Republic's approach towards foreign-backed riots that erupted in some Iranian cities in September.

The ministry's statement referred to the reciprocal measures as "counteraction" approved by the Islamic Republic's "relevant authorities" and authorized by the country's "counter-sanction mechanisms".

Support for terrorism It specified some of the reasons for the enactment of the reciprocal measures as the EU and UK's "support for terrorism and terrorist groups" and their "incitement to acts of terror and violence against the Iranian people".

German inflation rises to 9.2% in January

rte.ie

Germany's inflation rate showed no signs of easing at the start of the year, as energy and food price pressures remained high due to the war in Ukraine.

German consumer prices, harmonised to compare with other European Union countries, rose by 9.2% on the year in January, data from the federal statistics office showed Wednesday, rte.ie reported.

'Equality of injustice for all': Saudi Arabia expands crackdown

Saudi Arabian courts are meting out harsher punishments than ever to citizens who criticize the government, with prosecutions built on Twitter posts ending in prison sentences of 15 to 45 years.

The New York Times reporter Vivian Nereim, who has reported from inside Saudi Arabia since 2015, conducted interviews with family members of Saudi detainees and gained access to a number of key court documents to support her claim.
