INTERVIEW EXCLUSIVE

A member of Parliament announced that foreign countries are interested in investing in the port city of Chabahar, stating that Chabahar is Iran's only oceanic port in the southeast and provides access to international waters and distant continents for many regional countries.

Mohammad Anwar Bajarzehi, in an interview with Iran Daily, highlighted the significant economic and commercial potential of Chabahar Port, emphasizing that the port alone could revitalize the country's economy. He noted, however, that achieving this potential requires "infrastructure development, increased investment, and the reduction of bureaucratic hurdles in the region".

Bajarzehi added that Chabahar is the only port in Iran with high re-export capacity, the sole port connecting the North-South Corridor to international waters, and the only port exempt from sanctions.
