Interaction or confrontation?

Since Donald Trump reignited the maximum pressure campaign against Iran last week, questions have arisen about his true intentions—whether he seeks “interaction” or an “agreement” with Tehran. Iranian Parliament Speaker Mohammad Baqer Qalibaf warned that Trump's recent sanctions targeted not only the nuclear program, but also Iran's military capabilities, signaling a push for disarmament. The shift raises doubts about Trump's earlier willingness to negotiate, leading some experts to interpret his actions as a mix of coercive diplomacy, while others fear it signals a move toward brinkmanship and potential military confrontation.
